This is a submission to OLGR's small bars review. OLGR should allow submissions without residents names published so that residents can talk freely about the bad economics in relation to alcohol. OLGR should know that residents are vulnerable to paybacks when they complain.

I refer to complaints I've made to licensing sergeant KX police, City of Sydney and OLGR about drunk people engaging in harassment from outdoor seating, namely the Bourbon at Kings Cross, the Fountain Cafe at Kings Cross and the Sugar Mill at Kings Cross. I put many submissions in the Lockouts review detailing these but only the last was published.

In all these cases the complaint was not investigated despite CCTV being available. The three authorities are not doing their job in relation to complaints. The three authorities need to act independently. OLGR kept flicking my complaint to police, but Kings Cross police are very bad and there is no reason why OLGR should trust them with their job.

Women and others have the right to use the street without being harassed by drunken locals who in all these cases were customers of who owns a local bottle shop manipulates his position on the and other public roles and gossips to his socially excluded alcoholic customers and employees about my views (which are generally in favour of residential amenity and the environment and heritage and rights). This then causes street harassment where Kings Cross police stick up in favour of commercial interests.

In my opinion the Accord, the Kings Cross Plan of Management, creates bias by police who do not investigate complaints against certain operators. They turn a blind eye. KX police used the drunken violence issue to drive out organised crime by some venues rather than tackle unilateral anti social behaviour by drunks.

Drunk people also create noise and lots of small bars would mean noise for residential neighbours at night. The City of Sydney's small bars and cafés are already inappropriately managed with council 'a rangers, health environment officers and complaints officers not doing their job properly in relation to compliance. In one case, had outdoor dining for at least five years and the council did not notice! We are woken at night by commercial and industrial noise such as garbage collection and deliveries and the council will not do anything about it.

I seek the opportunity to demonstrate to you the bad attitudes of OLGR, Kings Cross police and City of Sydney towards residents who complain about their incompetent management and in particular I wish to tell you about the behaviour of in relation to complaints and residents. I wish to do so without my name being published as I have experienced very serious payback by

I oppose small bars until the relationship between police council and OLGR is fixed and there is a real compliance regime.
