There has been an overwhelmingly positive outcome since the introduction of laws to limit the availability of alcohol. People who argue that the laws should be lifted, have no regard for the safety and well-being of the community at large, or the individuals who put themselves and innocent others at risk. The culture that urges young people (particularly young men) to get wasted on Friday and Saturday nights, ignores the horrific outcomes of death and disability. Do we want to bring this back so we can call Sydney "Sophisticated"?
