To all who must be informed,

My name is Jayden Anderson, I'm 18 years old from Western Sydney. As someone that has known people that go out regularly for a few years prior to myself turning 18, I was looking forward to joining them in multiple clubs when I became of legal age however, the lockout laws have drastically changed what I was expecting, as well as many of the people I was looking to dance and drink with, no longer heading out into the city on the weekend. The many small businesses in the city are greatly affected by this, yes they aren't dealing with as many aggressive drunks, but they are also dealing with substantially less people in general. Also, as a DJ, several of the clubs that assisted in DJs getting there name out into the nightlife have closed down, making it that much more difficult to get a start with club gigs. Please do not turn a city, that had people looking forward to turning 18, into a city that made people prefer to move state or even country.

Regards,
Jayden
