I think the lockout laws are poorly thought out, as is the ban of liquor after 10pm.

I moved to Sydney just over 4 years ago as I had such a great time here when first visiting from the UK. Sydney was vibrant and such a fun place to be...

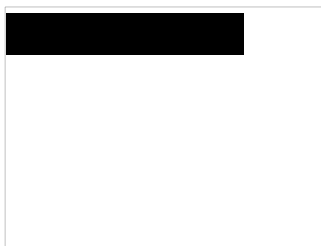

Now it is nothing more than a nanny state – I have an aggressive bouncer that tells me where I can/can't stand, what I can/can't drink, the state decides that I must be some kind of thug should I wish to buy a bottle of wine to take home at 10.15pm...

I have never once had a fight after consuming alcohol, nor have most of my friends. Sydney has let some terrible incidents influence its thinking and decide that everybody should be deemed untrustworthy because of a minority that are unable to behave themselves whilst drinking.

When the rest of the world is able to manage people who want to go out and have fun, whilst drinking – why is it so hard for Sydney to do the same?

It is shameful that Mike Baird has allowed Kings Cross to get to the point where it is clearly ready for the developers to come in and knock it down. Don't let Sydney go from being one of the cool-est cities on the planet to such a boring place that resembles a ghost town now in the evenings.

Mike Baird & co should be ashamed of themselves.
