I wish to express my hope that Sydney can return to being the dynamic city it once was rather than the over-regulated, boring and puritanical city it is at present.

The number of laws are almost laughable if it weren't so depressing. If I were an overseas tourist used to freedom and fun, I certainly wouldn't visit Sydney.

Also I wonder if a lot of these laws were put into place in order to destroy certain areas eg Kings Cross so that developers can move in. Is it all just about money as per usual?? And doesn't every city need a red light district?

In despair,
