Dear Hon. Ian Callinan AC,

Australians are fast loosing their freedom, we already have some of the strictest laws in the world around alcohol, cigarettes, driving, and freedom of association.

Australians live in a bubble of protectionism and thus unable to appreciate our already low rates of crime.

In a place like Brazil with 60,000 murders per year, people still go out at night, all night. It is a choice they make out of free will.

The main supporters of lock out laws are people who do not go out themselves. In this situation I feel their opinion is irrelevant. One group of society should not curtail the freedom of another.

Yours Sincerely,

Andre Boisvert
