

 Reply all | ▾

 Delete

Junk | ▾

My view

JB Jake Bradshaw

Reply all | ▾

To: Liquor Law Review; ▾

Mon 11:05 PM

Inbox

Hey there,

I'm no one of great importance; nor have i got anything to do with the downfall of business and I'm not a typical teenager that goes out on the weekends. i just want to have my say in this and i hope you lend an ear. I believe Australia is the most over-regulated country in the world and these liquor laws have crossed the line by a long shot. Yes they did start because of a few deaths, but i believe these wouldn't have happened even if the laws were in place at that time. In fact i believe one of them or even both occurred before 10:30 pm. I feel these laws are curbing around the problem. Australia has a strong drinking culture. These laws are definitely not affecting the drinking culture. You probably get loads of emails about the casino topic, but whether there is corruption or not, it doesn't matter, this is just something on the side. The main problem is Sydneys culture loss. Its vanishing, and its embarrassing. If this continues for too long, culture will be lost and not passed down to next generation. this will be forever lost :(

In the end this needs to stop and i could go on and on over this topic, as there are 0 positives about it. Violence % has not stopped, just a large decrease in people going out has. there will always be violence and people know this when they go out to town. There are other ways of dealing with this problem. more police. more CCTV. extended public transport hours..... these are so simple and i just don't understand?

My words may not mean much, but help make people enjoy there life more, everyone only lives once kind regards,

Jake.