

Grave concerns about the consequences of Sydney's Lockout Laws

KB Kieran Bramich [REDACTED]

👤 Reply all | ▾

To: Liquor Law Review; ▾

3:47 PM

Inbox

28059422_1KSO.pdf ▾
166 KB

▾ Show all 1 attachment (166 KB) Download

To whom it may concern:

There's a chance you are receiving many emails with this exact document attachment, with little variation between aside from signatures and names. However, I would like to use the message area to deliver a unique message of my own construction.

As explained by the Subject header, I have undeniable concerns about the effectiveness, close-mindedness and overall consequences of the 2014 lockout laws. When the laws came into play, the effects they had became evident well into 2015 and continued to claim small businesses and livelihoods built around catering to Sydney's night owls. The evidence is well-documented that the majority of Sydneysiders don't see the need of such draconian laws. The only businesses which have profited from such law-making are the casinos and property developers honing in on the areas Sydney's nightlife once was. Few other industries was benefit from the adoption of these laws.

Here's a few examples of the industries which will have been affected first-hand:

- Hospitality: pubs, clubs and bar owner first and foremost with the inclusion of accommodation as fewer people will want to visit Sydney.
- Tourism: a city cannot thrive on zoos, aquariums, skyline views and any other form of family-centric entertainment alone.
- Music: Artists have fewer places to meet and perform, thus stemming the music culture of the city.
- Small Business Merchants: Kebab shops, convenience stores and various other industries rely on nighttime customers to stay afloat.

And no doubt, many, many other business will be affected second-hand as fewer potential consumers will be available.

If Sydney really is a world city, it MUST be held to world standards. Fortunately, we have the opportunity to allow Sydney to heal. I strongly urge you to consider the recommendations in this list. If Sydney sees substantial lockout reform this August, we can redeem Sydney's vibrancy and world image. Some consequences of these laws may be irreversible, but I'm certain we can make ends meet and create a safer atmosphere.

Thank you for your consideration

- Kieran Bramich

Submission to the Review of the Liquor Amendment Act 2014 by the Hon. IDF Callinan AC QC

4 April 2016

To: Liquor Law Review, liquorlawreview@justice.nsw.gov.au

From: Kieran Bramich

As a Sydney resident and a peaceful participant of its once vibrant nightlife, I am grateful for the opportunity to make this submission. I am writing to you because I have personally experienced the impacts that the lockout laws have had on our city – I have seen businesses close, witnessed the loss of jobs, lamented the lack of places to socialise with my friends and mourned the dwindling opportunities to listen to live, local music.

We all agree that safe streets are a priority, but there are better ways to achieve this. Evidence and common sense suggests that a better planned response could have a greater effect on reducing alcohol-related violence without having the unintended consequences that the lockout laws have had.

What happened?

Sydney's night-time economy had an awkward start to life. It grew up and out too quickly and without being properly planned for. Before we knew it, tens of thousands of people were coming into a few precincts every Friday and Saturday night, and yet instead of being managed on the scale this required, Kings Cross was left to its own devices. The police were not willing or able to deal with the belligerent or violently inclined. The venues were packed and the streets were chaotic. When it all got too much or you decided it was time to go home, the busses and trains had stopped and the fight for a cab was a long one.

Then, tragically, two young men lost their lives. The city mourned and rightly decided things had to change. The government's response, however, chose to deflect the blame and rushed through blanket laws without consultation. The lockout laws have been a failure.

What needs to change?

The lock-out laws have caused irreparable damage to the economic, social and cultural fabric of Sydney. Instead of the 1:30am lockout and 3.00am cease of service, the 7 key actions below should be implemented together to curb the violence and keep Sydney open for all to enjoy.

- 1 Developing best-practice policing strategies;
- 2 Investing in 24/7 public transport;

- 3 Implementing integrated urban planning reform;
- 4 Encouraging diversification of after-dark activities;
- 5 Establishing anti-violence education & intervention campaigns;
- 6 Incentivising well-run venues; and
- 7 Appointing a Night Mayor.

SIGNED , 4 APRIL 2016