To Whom it May Concern,

The current draconian mass micromanagement of grown adults is surely not the answer?

Why are we not drilling down to the reasons behind our inherent bogan culture, and then activating an educational campaign, backed by intelligent policy, aimed at changing what people consider to be "cool" behaviour, instead of inflicting patronising blanket rules across the board?

We should be aiming for a freer, more bohème vibe in our city, akin to many parts of Europe, instead of the current patronising, Nanny State atmosphere.

Further to this, the pissed-up bogans haven't gone home to bed with a hot cuppa Cocoa, like good little boys and girls, they've simply infiltrated Newtown.

This whole policy strikes me as a big, lazy band-aid, slapped on a far deeper wound than it is designed to heal, by a bunch of acutely religious individuals, who are driven by a far-right wing ideology.

Sincerely,

Rachel Campbell
