To whom it may concern,

The heartbeat of the city is made of many different voices and stories and culture made by the different people and memories shared.

By letting the city back to late night food and drinks and small and large bars opens the way for many different visitors to the city to make new memories and grow the culture of this city. By encouraging late nite food vending as well as late night beverages the city can maintain many more jobs and encourage a community of arts and culture a a world destination which sydney has until recently enjoyed. there are many people should not be punished for the actions of a few hooligans, and there will always be hooligans in all levels of society so it's not fair to the rest of us to be punished as well. if we have more bars and late night food venues we can have late night art and dance... places for old and young people alike to go an have fun. who doesn't like a special outing after a movie? even just for a dinner? with our growing population in sydney it will be a depressing day if everyone who wants a late night meal needs to meet in secret... or cannot use public transport as there will be none left if all the venues are closed, and life is meant to be enjoyed with moments shared so please can you let the all night venues continue.

yours sincerely
Louise Campbell -Smith
