While there are some traders who are miffed at not being able to supply alcohol throughout the night, their main complaint is that the boozers go elsewhere (Coogee, Double Bay, etc).

The boozed up violence in the past is that the liquor providers cannot manage cutting off their intoxicated customers. If they could manage this appropriately, then we could support the extended trading (but they cannot unless they have a security presence equal to the casinos) and our emergency workers simply shouldn't be exposed to these avoidable risks.

So I would ask that you do the Kings Cross and City traders a favour and extend last drinks cut-off across the whole of NSW wherever there is such alcohol fuelled violence.
