I'm writing to endorse the City of Sydney Council's submission regarding changes to late night venues and sale of alcohol. As a young person who has spent my 20s and the first few years of my 30s enjoying the dynamic nightlife Sydney once had to offer, I believe there is great merit in Clover Moore and her cohort's submission.

I appreciate that the Liquor Laws came in to effect in order to address escalating violence in our city. The sad reality is that a blanket law does nothing to address the underlying societal issues that bring about this kind of alcohol fuelled violence – it seems to me a classic case of setting the horse before the cart, and in the process punishes the majority of well behaved and responsible citizens of our city.

I find Mike Baird's moralism particularly concerning and hope this review goes some way towards re-energising our city's once thriving entertainment industry.

Best,
