

Liquor laws review

Oscar Colman [REDACTED]

Wed 30/03/2016 11:56 AM

To: Liquor Law Review <liquorlawreview@justice.nsw.gov.au>;

As a patron of many small bars and host to numerous home backyard parties and barbecues, it's safe to say I enjoy a drink. However, I would like to state that as a free thinking, responsible adult, it should be up to me to decide when and how much to drink. I believe that maturity comes from learning from mistakes and rebellion comes from pushing back against overly tight restrictions.

Show respect and it is more often shown back. If you want to have the support of the people that give you the power to make decisions for us, listen to us.

Violent people are violent people, and those violent people could be dangerously intoxicated at any time in the day.

Anyone in the world that looks at the current parameters of the lockouts and accompanying restrictions on sale of alcohol can clearly see that it is a farce, that to heavily correlates to benefiting a couple of casinos.

Save yourselves and the state from this embarrassing position, cut losses and bring back rational legislation before it is undermined by it's stupidity.

Best go with more police presence and better education, and heavier penalties for offenders.

Sincerely,

Oscar Colman

Sent from Oscar's iPhone