I lived in Sydney for almost 40 years from the early 70s. Alcohol didn't seem to be a problem in the early days but long before we left there were parts of town we did not feel safe visiting after dark. In particular the Kings Cross area was, even in the late 90s a no-go zone for ordinary folk from late in the evening.

The alcohol laws have undoubtedly saved people from serious injury and possibly saved lives. Please pay attention to the police and health workers and not to the alcohol "industry" lobby.
