To whom it may concern,

I'm writing in regards to Sydney's lockout laws and the effect it has had on the community, culture and greater workforce.

As a marketing specialist, I work for a technology company that clients' include hotels, b&b's, and hostels across Australia.

Our client's have been directly effected by Sydney lockout laws as there are less tourists, especially those under 30 years old who want to visit Sydney.

They've noticed a sharp drop in room bookings, revenue, as well as length of stay - all a direct result of Sydney shutting its doors out on bar and club culture.

I worry that because of the revenue loss our company has faced, we too will face cuts to our business. It is only a matter of time.

The tourism industry relies on providing different experiences for people of all ages. Currently Sydney is neglecting a part of the demographic.

Regards
Francesca
