Sydney has become a horrible boring place ever since the lockout laws were introduced. I remember just after it happened I ran into some French tourists after I had finished work at 11pm who asked me where they could go to buy some alcohol to take home. I said they couldn't because of the new laws. They were incredibly disappointed.

From my own experience, the lockout laws has meant the need for pre drinking at home is higher than ever and racing to venues to get in on time. It has discouraged me from going out at all. They need to go.
