The facts are there for all to see, less people presenting with head or other injuries, less strain on the medical, police and ambulance services. More importantly fewer families destroyed by alcohol fueled violence. Are economics more important than human life - consider the cost to the community for a head injury.

Clover's idea to open up the parks will see an increase in alcohol fueled assaults, both physical and sexual.

I worked in the cross in the late eighties and been in an out of the city for 29 years of policing - I think I have some idea.

Stick to your guns - you did the right thing (the hard thing) and now society needs to support you. The facts speak for themselves, less people being injured. I'm not a wowser, far from it, but the facts show the positive effects these laws have brought about. Don't change them. Speak and act for those that can't or won't speak for themselves - you are saving lives.
