To whom it may concern.

Although it is important to consider health and community concern as it relates to the Australian culture of alcohol consumption, a blanket lockout of late night venues (be it music, bar, or food venue) may not be the most educated response.

I believe venue support and promotion - advocating participation in cultural events that are not alcohol or gambling focused - is what builds culture and society and makes a precinct both interesting and safe. Here commercial and community concerns can become welcomed bedfellows in creating an area with high pedestrian traffic and social interaction - an architecture for humanity.

Please consider a global picture that includes people, connection and space rather than prohibition when considering the health of the community and entertainment precincts.

Best regards, Michael Galeazzi.
