To whom it may concern,

As someone who is here on a working holiday visa, I must admit I am extremely disappointed with the nightlife in Sydney. For a city that promises so much, once it goes dark I feel as if I'm being forced to sit in my room to watch TV instead of enjoying my young years having fun going clubbing.

Mike Baird is only interested within the figures, as long as he see's a decrease in crime etc then he's happy. I've told friends back home about the lockout laws and it has put them off coming to Australia, they'd rather spend their younger years having fun in other countries where the government isn't trying to control your freedom and weekends in a big brother style. Yes you get jobs when alcohol is involved, but you also get jobs when alcohol is not involved. Spend the money educating Australians at a younger age about alcohol and you wont have this problem now.
