Please reconsider these laws. They have had a detrimental effect on the city as a whole and my time spend within it.

Or if they are to continue, I find it only fair that the most violent venue in the city be included in the zoning. The Star is a breeding ground for violence and anti social behaviour, and due to dirty money donations (whether traceable or not, we can all see what's happening) they are exempt to the laws that they'd would be best suited to.

And to deny that big money has nothing to do with the exemption would be to undermine the intelligence of the citizens of Sydney. Never a flattering thought.

We can encourage creativity and culture by listening to lead figures in the fight against these repressive laws, like Keep Sydney Open - who are making sensible recommendations to alternative policy that can achieve the outcomes wanted from both sides of the fence.

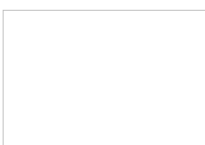

No violence, in a creative city - where the individual is trusted to make the right decisions. Not forced to succumb to invasive policy that borders on civil rights violation.

Sooner or later Sydney will live up to it's name as a global city. And not a city built to benefit a handful of back pockets.

We are smarter than you think.
