Dear Liquor Law Review,

I would like to submit my concerns about the current state of Sydney's Lock Out Laws.

Put simply, they are measures that reprimand the actions of the minority, at the expense of a cultural night-life to the majority.

Lock-out laws do NOT solve the source of the problem, but only act as a band-aid.

These short-term measures are creating long-term damage to the cultural development of our city where people can share in late-night environments without being forced into the streets or large venues, where the quality of the evening is degraded.

Lock-Out Laws are a punitive measure to what is actually a deeper social problem, which everyone is unnecessarily paying for.
