To whom it may concern,

I am a young student living in Sydney and I believe the lock out laws are ridiculous. Not only have they shut down many once-thriving bars but they have also taken financial tolls on the many other remaining clubs and bars. Apparently, they have been created to stop violence in Sydney but do you honestly think that by kicking out hundreds of drunk people out at 3am you are going to stop any violence? I have experienced violence in every situation possible, whether it be day or night, in the city or out of Sydney, you cannot ruin the beauty of Sydney just because of a few peoples mistakes. I think the government needs to re-think this decision, if not for all the entertainment business', then for the citizens and tourists that once loved Sydney for its vibrance. Sydney is dead now when one walks through the streets so I hope that someone reads this and really makes the right change.

Yours sincerely,
Hannah.
