As a registered nurse and former employee of the St Vincents Hospital in Sydney I witnessed first hand the carnage unfettered alcohol restrictions wrought on the area of Kings Cross and Darlinghurst. My former colleagues still manning the front line have told me of how wonderfully effective the new licensing laws have been in curbing the senseless violence that once routinely occurred there. In any decision made in review of these laws the tireless and uncomplaining efforts of those that will have to bear the brunt of any change, should be given serious consideration. Not everyone lives in a world with the luxury of not being abused or spat on simply for doing their job. Nor can those that have never had to roll up bloodied sleeves in order to save broken and bleeding bodies truly understand the toll this takes on an individual. So please spare a thought for those of us that do!
