To whom it may concern,

Having been a Sydneysider all my life and having grown up in the era of the 80's and 90's when the pub music scene was at its highest, I look back on those day with fond memories of city clubs and pubs where we would dance till dawn. Sadly the youth of today won't have that same experience as I did. I've seen kids just hanging out and drinking on the streets, which really is not a good look for a international city.

The lockout law won't stop alcohol fueled violence, its not illegal to consume alcohol (yet!) so people will just find new ways and new places to do it, this law just pushes the problem to other parts of the city. If you want to stop alcohol fueled violence then an education program surely would make more sense, or put more police on the streets, at least then you are creating jobs instead of losing them through loss of business.

Please repeal this antiquated law.
