To whom it may concern,

The liquor laws are crippling Sydney, not only the night life but as a whole. We don't need to rattle off statistics just look at the reaction of the population towards them. If this many people are trying to reverse a decision made by your government shouldn't it be taken seriously and put to a vote where not only do you get to choose the outcome, but the people who are going to be affected the most get to have their say too. I live in London at the moment and the vibe I'm getting from home is that you can't even go out in Sydney and have a good time any more. Instead of taking away all our toys as if we were naughty 5 year olds, how about you take a look at the bigger picture and take into account factors such as repeat offenders, stricter laws and the now "cool to be a bouncer trend" that's making a lot of patrons angry to see the way they treat people and abuse their authority, which I know has sparked several attacks within my area.

Open your eyes guys to the bigger picture, and if you still decide to go ahead wake up to yourselves and put it on the casinos too, who are you trying to fool there, you're just as bad a criminals as the one punch cowards themselves.

Enjoy your day.

Rhys.
