To whom it may concern,

At 42 years of age, the only job I have ever known has been working booking bands in Sydney's live music scene. While it's understood that certain citizens will go overboard on drugs and alcohol and hit people, it is ethically wrong to punish many for the sins of the few. I would say that most people involved in Sydney's live music scene or people who work late in general will want to have the option of a drink at 2am or later. They should have the right to do so. If Sydney is to be a global city, it needs to have laws like other global cities... And besides, adults should have the right to make their own decisions.

The recent lock out laws, the heavy handed nature of restrictions put on Sydney's population has had a devastating effect on the culture and music scene of this city. It's time to let adults and businesses make their own decisions and trade as needed. Repeal the laws to allow this to happen. Please.

Jordan Verzar.
